

JUNIOR MEDICAL OFFICER LOG

Date: November XX 2491

Patient: Amelia Reed

Condition: Severed cybernetic arm from trying to remove it and fix communications which were reportedly offline. This attempted removal resulted in a crossed electrical connection which caused seizures in the spinal cybernetics after the oil made contact with the exposed wire.

Treatment: Emergency tourniquet was applied to stop the oil from leaking. Emergency procedure was performed to connect and replace the broken tubing and reconnect the wires. Oil transfusion was given after to help replace what was lost. Patient was kept briefly tested to ensure fit to return to duty. Patient was also instructed to come to the medbay in a week for a wound check.

Notes: Reed was brought in by Lieutenant Junior Grade Blight. Blight dragged her through the halls to medbay with a scarf leaving a streak of oil all over the halls. Blight was thanked, but was also instructed on proper transportation of a patient.

Reed seemed to have some form of traumatic response to waking up after treatment. Whether it be from the current incident, or from an event in the past is unknown. Reed also mentioned having a very rare blood type. Will update patient charts in case of a need for a blood transfusion.

After she was stabilized and conscious, Reed was visited by several members of the staff, including Lieutenant Commander Keener and Lieutenant Commander Aryxovexs. While I was cleaning up and disposing of material, L.C. Aryxovexs decided to consume an entire bottle of medical grade isopropyl alcohol after confusing the medical bay for a drinking establishment. Aryxovexs was reprimanded by Commander Devall. The side effects of the isopropyl alcohol are unknown on the biology of Weavekin, but will be monitored closely. Child safety locks will be installed on the cabinets of the medbay to prevent further incidents in the future.
